

Ashley Burger

Ashley is a northern Virginia native who began studying dance at the Russell School of Ballet in Chantilly, VA where she first met Ivy Chow. She completed her dance education at the University of North Carolina School of the Arts under the tutelage of Melissa Hayden. She had the privilege to attend and perform with the Washington Ballet School, University of North Carolina School of the Arts, and Boston Ballet summer dance intensives. In addition, she had the honor of participating in the Kennedy Center Class Series. Ashley then performed as a trainee with the Richmond Ballet, where she was awarded soloist roles in Balanchine's "Rubies" and "Who Cares?" as well as demi-soloist roles in The Nutcracker among other contemporary new works. She has since performed in collaborations with Kyoko Ruch in the Richmond Choreographer's showcase, VCU Dance, Mayzoul, Skydancer Entertainment, and most recently with the I.C. Movement Project.
